Introduction

The purpose of this statement is to provide additional transparency around policy-motivated 'expenditures' made through the tax system. Tax expenditures take the form of an exemption, allowance, preferential tax rate, deferral or offset that reduce a tax obligation to achieve a specific policy objective.

This is the third successive release of tax expenditure data; 2010 was the first time New Zealand released tax expenditure data since 1984. This voluntary disclosure fills an obvious weakness in our current transparency arrangements by bringing New Zealand's financial reporting closer to OECD best practice standards. As with other disclosures, additional tax expenditure transparency is not intended to be a statement of policy effectiveness or desirability.

What Is a Tax Expenditure?

Governments can spend in a variety of direct and indirect ways. International public sector accounting standards (IPSAS 23) divide spending into three different categories: direct spending; spending through the tax system; and tax expenditures. Until 2010, The Treasury had not released tax expenditure information in recent years, although information on the first two categories of spending has been routinely released as part of our annual accountability data.

Table 1: Classification of Crown spending under public sector accounting standards

	Definition	Reporting
Direct spending	Traditional spending made as a direct transfer between the Crown and different entities or individuals.	Disclosed in the Crown Financial Statements and annual Budget.
Spending through the tax system	Hybrid transfers that can be taken as a cash payment or via a reduction in tax.	A predictable cash value allows these transfers to be formally appropriated and disclosed in the Crown Financial Statements and annual Budget.
Tax expenditures	Individual features of the tax system that reduce an entity's tax obligation in a way that is designed to give effect to policy other than to raise revenue in the most efficient and economically neutral way.	Tax expenditures are defined in tax legislation, but have not previously been disclosed. The 2010 statement was the first disclosure since 1984.

Tax systems differ from country to country. Thus, there is no current international consensus as to how tax expenditures should be categorised. Treasury released a discussion of how tax expenditure reporting could be categorised to meet New Zealand's objectives in Treasury Policy Perspectives Paper 09/01.

Some countries define tax expenditures indirectly relative to a normative benchmark. This approach allows countries to report a wider set of structural tax expenditures that are generally applicable¹. This document has focused, in the first instance, on a narrow subset of tax expenditures that bear a distinct fiscal cost and represent a clear policy-motivated exemption² to current tax practice. A summary of the guiding criteria is included in figure 1.

The 2010 Tax Expenditure Statement was a first step towards improved transparency in this area and a statement for 2011 was also released; this document provides an update. No attempt has been made to identify a normative tax benchmark or to comprehensively analyse tax legislation. Work on identification has begun and is expected to continue as part of a multi-year work programme. For this reason, this preliminary list should not be taken as an exhaustive or complete list of all current tax expenditures.

¹ For example, Portfolio Investment Entities (PIEs) offer all tax payers the option of relatively 'concessional' tax treatment as a mechanism to encourage portfolio investment. While a non-revenue policy objective suggests that PIEs could be categorised as a tax expenditure, PIEs are excluded from the tax expenditure definition used in this document as PIEs are available to all taxpayers. A benchmark tax system would allow the Treasury to categorise structural features of the tax system such as PIEs, trusts, or progressive personal tax rates. A benchmark tax structure is useful where no clear exemption exists as it would define what constitutes the 'standard' tax treatment. For instance, is the 'standard rate' the company rate, PIE rate, trust rate, or one of the personal tax rates?

² The stated purpose of the Income Tax Act 2007 is to "define, and impose tax on, net income". Tax expenditures are not motivated by a desire to raise revenue in the most efficient manner possible, but instead are significantly motivated by non-revenue policy objectives.

Current Tax Expenditures

The following sections list tax expenditures drawn from both the Income Tax Act 2007 and the Goods and Services Act 1985. Appropriated cash payments (spending) made through the tax system, e.g. Working for Families tax credits, have also been included in the final part of the list. Cash payments made through the tax system do not formally meet a tax expenditure definition, but have been included for transparency purposes.

A small sub-section of tax expenditures with readily accessible data has been quantified (refer table 2). The government does not collect data on all tax expenditures as the compliance cost of collecting additional data is, in some instances, considered prohibitive. While work quantifying tax expenditures will continue, many tax expenditures may not be able to be quantified.

Table 2: Quantified tax expenditures and spending through the tax system

Quantified tax expenditures	Value of expenditure 2010/11 (estimated actual)	Value of expenditure 2011/12 (forecast)

Tax Expenditures Included in the Goods and Services Act 1985⁴

Duty free goods: zero rating

Section 11 of the Goods and Services Act 1985

Approved retailers are allowed a zero GST rating on goods that will be taken out of the country.

Financial services general: exemption

Sections 14(1) and 11 of the Goods and Services Act 1985

The supply of financial services and any goods and services incidental to the provision of those services are either exempt from GST or subject to a zero-rated rate of GST.

Leases or leasehold land: exemption

Section 14(1) of the Goods and Services Act 1985

Leases or the supply of leasehold land by way of rental is exempt from GST, to the extent that the land is used for the principal purpose of accommodation in a dwelling.

Residential land and property sales: exemption

Section 14(1) of the Goods and Services Act 1985

The sale of any dwelling is exempt from GST.

Supply of fine metal: exemption

Sections 14(1) and 11 of the Goods and Services Act 1985

The supply of fine metal is either exempted (domestic sales) or subject to a zero-rated rate of GST.

The sale or supply of accommodation: exemption

Section 14(1) of the Goods and Services Act 1985

The supply or sale of accommodation in a dwelling by way of hire, service, or occupancy agreement is exempt from GST.

⁴ The GST Act 1985 provides two types of exemption: a pure exemption; and a zero rating. A zero rating is potentially more concessionary as the business retains the ability to claim GST on inputs.
