Investing for Wellbeing

Adaptability

Paying attention

Roimata Toroa symbolises the falling tears of the Albatross – a rare bird revered by Māori. It is a reminder of the misfortune resulting from inattention.

Q: Can the investment respond to expected long-term trends, like technological and demographic change?

Efficiency

Momentum for progress

Puhoro symbolises the rippling pattern created by the strokes of many oars propelling a canoe swiftly through water.

Q: Is the investment being used productively?

Effectiveness

Dynamic balance – reconciling need and opportunity

Mumu symbolises unity through tribal alliances and intermarriage. It signifies that important needs can be met synergistically through the amalgamation of objectives.

Q: Does the investment system select the highest priority investments to improve wellbeing?

Resilience

Tenacious resolve and endurance

Mangopare, the Hammerhead shark, symbolises a leader's resolve and endurance.

Q: Can the investment cope with unexpected events, like natural disasters?

Sustainability

Intergenerational prosperity

Pārekereke, the unfurling fern frond, symbolises the nurturing and wellbeing of younger generations.

Q: Will funding sustain expected service delivery over the long term, under current policy settings?

System settings

Noble behaviour and protection of people and assets

Kaokao symbolises a leader's protective embrace, whose strength does not come from one alone but from many, moving and acting in unison.

Q: Do system settings produce investment management behaviours that maximise wellbeing?

Information

Shared knowledge

Poutama symbolises human advancement and the sharing of knowledge to benefit all people.

Q: Does information allow decision-makers to understand the impacts on wellbeing?

Distribution

For the benefit of all people

Purapurawhetū symbolises the many people of a nation and likens them to the myriad of stars.

Q: How are the wellbeing outcomes distributed?

This poster has been produced in conjunction with the New Zealand Treasury's 2018 Investment Statement He Puna Hao Pātiki. The Statement appraises government's investment in public assets and liabilities – like schools, hospitals, financial investments and commercial enterprises – and explores how investments can more effectively contribute to wellbeing.

At the heart of the Treasury is our meeting house, named Ngā Mokopuna a Tāne, literally The Grandchildren of Tāne. The design elements in this poster employ patterns from the lattice-work panels, scrolls and carvings adorning Ngā Mokopuna a Tāne, to portray key themes of He Puna Hao Pātiki.
